

A DATASHEET

Trends and Policy: U.S. Healthcare

U.S. healthcare is one of the most salient, controversial, and debated topics today.

Trends and Policy: U.S. Healthcare is the second in a series of topical collections designed to facilitate the exploration of US government policies in context. Up until now researchers had to search for U.S. government policy in one location, the outcomes of that policy someplace else, and discover the context of that policy at yet another location. In addition to the timelines putting the history of healthcare policy in chronological context and the contextual topic pages explaining complex healthcare policy issues, this collection includes all major healthcare related public laws and Congressional hearings, legislative and executive branch reports, and carefully curated statistical data series. This allows researchers and students to connect the origins of healthcare policies with their outcomes through data...from the early 19th Century to today.

Trends and Policy: U.S. Immigration

The first module in this planned series, Trends and Policy: U.S. Immigration, simplifies the discovery process by providing a single location to cross-search relevant documents from 1790-today. These include U.S. immigration laws and other content from the legislative branch, reports and statistics from the executive and judicial branches and news content to provide additional information and context. Covers research topics such as: border security, Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA), Japanese-American internment, National Security and Immigration, nonimmigrant (temporary) visas, REAL IS Act of 2005, unaccompanied children, and many more.
